Community Collaboration!

We are thrilled to welcome Greenwich Historical Society to our roster of community collaborations here at The Greens at Greenwich. Being a member of the Greenwich and Greater New York City area has many rewards, but one of the most fulfilling is partnering with other community members, programs, and organizations.

Greenwich Historical Society, founded in 1931, preserves and interprets Greenwich history as a means of strengthening the community's connection to its past, present, and future. Rich with resources, Greenwich Historical Society features the historic Bush-Holley House, a Permanent Collections Gallery and Special Exhibitions Gallery, a Library and Archive Reading Room, and beautiful restored gardens based upon original plant lists and period documentation. Greenwich Historical Society enriches the community by offering dynamic programs and exhibitions that spark dialogue and inspire meaningful conversations.

This year our residents have taken numerous outings to Greenwich Historical Society. In March, we explored the Permanent Collections Gallery, showcasing works by members of the Cos Cob art colony. In April, we were delighted to return to visit their Special Exhibition Gallery, LIFE: Six Women Photographers, featuring the work of six prominent women photographers from LIFE magazine. Last month, we returned again for a lovely tour of their garden. Our docent, Kate, walked us through the garden highlighting plants, fruits, vegetables and herbs among the original plant list from 100+ years earlier.

As of late last month, Greenwich Historical Society now facilitates group programs, specifically tailored to our residents, here in our home. Our first program linked our beautiful garden tour on their campus with our own herb garden at The Greens. The program introduced residents to more of the plants colonial settlers would have grown in their gardens, and touched on the history of Native plants and the Columbian Exchange. This gave residents the opportunity to touch, smell, and taste different herbs, providing them with multiple points of connection through their senses.

We greatly look forward to continued opportunities for connection as our partnership develops, grows, and blossoms!
